

Critical Decision Making during Crisis

August 31-September 1, 2016

TRAINING ANNOUNCEMENT

Course Description:

On a daily basis, state and local public officials (including elected officials and state and local administrative management personnel) are expected to make decisions regarding issues, policy, and operations. Within the context of homeland security, officials often find themselves in circumstances requiring critical decision making due to a crisis affecting the safety and security of the citizens for which they are responsible. During protracted high-consequence events, they are expected to make critical decisions while also under significant physical and mental stress.

Critical Decision Making during Crisis provides discussion regarding overcoming hindrances and obstacles to effective decision making. The course also uses problem-solution situations and table-top activities to address critical decision making under stress.

Topics Include:

- Critical-thinking and Individual Decision-making Processes
- Group Dynamics and Critical Decision Making
- Information Sharing during Crisis
- Stress and Critical Decision Making
- Building an Effective Decision-making Environment
