Homemade Explosives (HME): Awareness, Recognition, and Response (AWR-313)

March 3, 2021

Course Basics

This virtual course will be offered on Wednesday, March 3, 2021 from 9:00am-5:00pm (EST). Access information will be provided in advance to all registered participants.

Course Provider

This virtual training will be provided by the New Mexico Tech First Responder Training Program.

Webinar Series Overview

This course provides first responders with information on general explosive characteristics and hazards, homemade explosive precursor materials, homemade explosive manufacturing indicators, and Improvised Explosive Device (IED) components. Additionally, the course teaches first responders how to identify a homemade explosive laboratory and how to establish scene safety and security in such an incident. First responders are also presented information regarding community awareness and education programs related to homemade explosives. This information better prepares first responders to recognize hazards associated with homemade explosives during response operations.

Specific Information for this Webinar

- Recognize explosive physical characteristics and hazards.
- Identify HME precursor materials and manufacturing equipment.
- Identify IED components and manufacturing indicators.
- Recognize HME laboratory indicators.
- Identify scene safety and security procedures at an HME incident.

Audience

This course is open to a broad array of first responders, including Law Enforcement, Emergency Management, the Fire Service, Emergency Medical Service (EMS) providers, Intelligence Liaison Officers (ILOs), and pertinent private sector partners.
